

A State That Will Work For Your Company

Indiana's state and local governments understand the value of strong businesses, so they've created plenty of reasons to locate here. Besides the geographic advantages of our central location and transportation infrastructure, Indiana has the nation's second-best cost of doing business, according to CNBC, with minimal regulation, no inventory taxes, and the nation's second-lowest workers comp rates.

Our well-run state government has been able to create generous incentives while maintaining a balanced budget and planning tax cuts every year through 2021. No wonder U.S. News ranked Indiana as having America's highest-quality government -- and no wonder so many companies choose to do business here!

Workforce Development Strategies That Keep Indiana Working

Indiana has long been recognized as a state that works hard with a focus on quality. We've been a leader in manufacturing and agribusiness for over a century, creating a culture that values work well done. That's reflected in the facts that Indiana is a right-to-work state with a low unionization rate among our 3.3 million workers and that companies enjoy the nation's second-lowest workers comp rates.

From our Governor on down, state and local governments support workforce development, with K-12 schools creating pathways based upon employer needs, and higher education providers delivering career-focused programs in fields such as manufacturing, food processing, distribution, and technology.

Locations That Work For Business Success

Indiana Communities Work Hard Thanks To Reliable, Affordable Power

Indiana's communities are a great place to do business, and thanks to low electricity costs, they're more profitable, too. While our state's average electric rates are already lower than those of other Midwestern states, communities served by IMPA enjoy rates that average 10 percent less than those of other Indiana electricity providers.

IMPA provides wholesale power to 61 municipally owned electric utilities throughout Indiana and Ohio, using local teams who provide fast and reliable service to our commercial and industrial customers.

Indiana offers a central location to businesses from many industries. As the nation's leader in manufacturing jobs, we're at the heart of the automotive corridor that runs from Michigan to Alabama, making us the ideal location for component suppliers. We're also home to some of America's most productive farmland, making us perfect for food production.

Best of all, Indiana makes it easy to move goods, with nearly 1,800 miles of Interstate and Interstate-grade highways in a hub-and-spoke system that puts local businesses within one-day truck drive of more than 200 million consumers. Add in nearly 4,500 miles of railroad, five international airports (and quick access to airports and air cargo in Chicago, Louisville, and Cincinnati), plus water ports on Lake Michigan and the Ohio River, and you'll be able to move what you need quickly and affordably.
